naps and plates, a handsome and interesting Like Angel's breath, or some sweet thing, Which draws the heart thereafter, This takes us back to loves first spring, When glad young years, Untouched by tears,

Seemed but revolving laughter; And all life's round was one "May Song,"

Which knew no winter's blight, The sunshine bore the day along, And night?-there was no night!

Wherewith we so annoy us, Though bought by care or earned by thought, And marked with soil, Of dusty toil, Can make us half so joyous As that glad time, when buds and flowers,

And all things pure and sweet, Were known as only God's and ours, And heaven lay at our feet? The very stars did point our pride, Each cloud enshrined a vision,

To which on sunbeams we could ride, And view our dreams, Like golden streams, Sweep on-through field's elysian; Each little bird, the wing could set

And flowers-paint us the alphabet, Whereby we talked with God! As youth and maiden how we stood, In love-lights dawning red, And little thought, there ever could

With which we sky-ward soar'd,

Be underneath Our Hope's gay wreath, Some disappointments, cold "death's head," We thought that love and truth were twins, Nor knew they leagued with One, Who holds the stakes, (let win, who wins,)

When the great game is done! Or each new bloomer seems But like some lonely human heart, That all unshared, Perhaps uncared,

Lives out its own sweet quiet dreams:

For not all flowers shall meet the fate Of being plucked for earth; Some shall remain inviolate, And heaven receive their breath, CANDIDATES.
